WILSON'S AMERICANISM.

If you were to ask a dozen American citizens to define the word "Americanism," probably you would receive as many answers. What the term denotes and connotes depends upon the character and mental make-up of the individual defining it.

To some men Americanism simply means unrestricted license to do as one pleases regardless of the rights of others or the limitations which the will of society, as expressed in law, sets upon one's conduct. These men belong to or gravitate toward the criminal classes, of low and high estate. To others Americanism is associated with a sort of chauvinistic sentiment which finds valuable expression in a patriotic clamor for this country of ours to follow the beckonings of "manifest destiny" and occupy a prominent "place in the sun."

In this day of world upheaval, we have many spokesmen for Americanism, all exploiting their own favorite brands, most of which are guaranteed to be the genuine article—take no other at your peril. Theodore Roosevelt purveys his own particular brand with strenuous persistency and Woodrow Wilson puts forth what he considers the unadulterated article. It would be interesting to contrast and compare the ideals of these two great men but today we purpose to give you only the Wilson conception of the word. In his speech at Charlotte, N. C., the president discussed the "soul of America," emphasizing that what he termed "untainted Americanism." His ideas may be gleaned from the following extracts from his speech:

"What I want to call your attention to is that this nation has devoted itself almost too much to material things. There have been other nations just as rich as the United States. We must think of what we are going to do with our wealth and our prosperity."

"What kind of fire of pure passion are you going to keep burning under the pot in order that the mixture that comes out may be purged of its dross and may be the fine gold of untainted Americanism? That is the problem."

"Europe is fighting out in war the questions we are fighting out in peace. As the processes of communication have grown better nations and peoples have grown closer together."

"Men can now learn more about each other. So that now the melting pot is bigger than America. It is as big as the world. See then what a new world we have come into."

"Here in America we tried to set the example of peace by keeping together. Isn't it the sign and dawn of a new age that the one thing now on which the world is about to fall back is the moral judgment of mankind?"

The president said he would like to think the "spirit of this occasion" could be expressed "if we could imagine ourselves lifting up some symbol of humanity."

He added he hoped the United States, after the European war, would be able to lift up a symbol of the "still small voice of humanity."

Chicago Grain.

Chicago, May 23.—Renewal of crop damage reports from the southwest led to something of an upturn today in the price of wheat after an early set back. The market closed steady at $1.09 1-8 for July and $1.09 7/8 to $1.10 for September with the range as a whole 1-8c off to 5-8c up compared with yesterday's finish. In corn, the outcome was a gain of 1-4c and 3-8c to 1-2c, and in oats 1-8c decline to a like advance. Provisions closed unchanged to 3-8c down.

Misgivings in regard to the Kansas crop had a good deal to do with turning sentiment to the bull side of the wheat market. Advances were also at hand telling of serious destruction by Hessian fly in Missouri and Illinois.

Corn rallied with wheat. The market was bullish influenced too by the scantiness of receipts and by Illinois reports that much replanting had been found necessary. Oats prices averaged lower as a result of favorable crop reports.

New York Cotton.

New York, May 23.—Reports that the eastern belt drought had been broken were followed by heavy general selling in the cotton market here today and prices broke well under the lowest level reached on the reaction of last week. July contracts sold down from 12.10c to 12.83c, closing at 12.87c with the general list closing barely steady at a net decline of 14 to 24 points.
